The New Maritime Law-Mr. Marcy's Reply. The reply of the Secretary of State to the new maritime law proposed by the allied powers of Europe, has been made public. Mr. Marcy argues the question with the statesmanlike ability that has characterised his administration of the State Department, and in conclusion states the decision of the United States Government. This portion of the reply is a key to the spirit of the whole: In discussing the effect of the proposed measurethe abolition of privateering-a reference to the existing condition of nations is almost unavoidable. An instance will at once present itself in regard to two nations where the commerce of each is about equal, and about equally wide-spread over the world. commercia! Powers they approach to an equality, but s naval Powers there is great disparity between them. The rigular navy of one vastly exceeds that of the other. In case of a war between them, only an inconsiderable part of the navy of the one would be required to prevent that of the other from being used for defence or aggression, while the remainder would be devoted to the unembarrassed employment of de stroying the commerce of the weaker in naval strength. The fatal consequences of this great ine-Mr. Wm. She obtained many privateers from Kerseys and Plains, Sheep's Grey Satinetts, Super Scotch Holland, and by this force gained decided advantage on the ocean over her enemy. Whilst in that condition, France could hardly have been expected to originate or concur in a proposition to abolish privateering. The condition of many of the smaller States of the world is now in relation to naval Powers, not much unlike that of France in the middle of the 16th century. But a small portion is cleared and under of so much annoyance and of so many injuries to neutral commerce, would be restricted to such cases only as justified a suspicion of an attempt to trade with places actually in a state of siege or blockade. Humanity and justice demand that the cala nities incident to war should be strictly limited to the beligerents themselves, and to those who voluntarily take part with them; but neutrals, abstaining in good faith from such complicity, ought to be left to pursue their ordinary trade with either beligerent, without restrictions in respect to the articles entering into it. Though the United States do not propose to embarrass the outer pending negotiations relative to the rights of neutrals, by pressing this change in the law of contraband, they will be ready to give it their reception by other maritime Powers.

and hence the kittens quarrel occasionally.

While we are upon the subject of crinoline, it may be as well to tell you the adventure which is forming the chief amusement of the Court at this moment and which happened a day or two ago at St. Cloud The Duchess de P., one of the most crinolined of all the ladies about the Empress, being in the fullest feather for the dinner to which she had been invited by her imperial mistress, was led into the salle a manger by the little Count de M., a man of great renown, but of very small stature. The Duchess of a tall commanding figure, and is besides, particularly liberal of ermoline, which she is accused of exaggerating to most inconvenient proportions. The doors at St. Cloud are not of the same mighty dimensions as those at the Tuilleries; and although the two battans were thrown wide open, it was with some dismay the little Count beheld the work before him, when he compared the width of the door with that of the crinoline of the lady on his arm! Just at the awful moment of the passage, however, the lady un consciously dropped her fan-the Count, forgetful of his perilous position confined between the doorway, having no other fear before his eyes but that of seeming to be deficient in gallantry and good manners, imprudently stooped to pick it up. At that moment, he Duchess was actually passing through the doorstacle which prevented her advancing.

A Romance of Crinoline.

The ogre crinoline had swallowed up the knigth even more effectually than in the fairy days of old, for no trace of his former existence was visible. The company following in pairs was stopped as a matter of course-those who had gone on before had already reached their seats at the table, and turned in wonder to behold the strange scene which was enacting family portraits are greatly in demand in Europe, for at the door, where the tall, majestic, and unusually when a nobody becomes wealthy, a set of ancestors dignified Duchess de P. was capering and caracoling have immediately to be manufactured for him, and with a scared and terrified countenance, and the rest he can purchase them ready made so much the better. of the company pressing forward to behold what was It is not unsual for a dealer to receive the following the matter. Another Old Line Whig Senator out for Buchanan-Senator Jones, of Tennessee. Senator Jones, of Tenn, delivered a magnificent speech in the Senate to-day. Without surrendering any of his Whig principles, he declared his purpose to support the democratic nominees for President and Vice President. He takes this position as the only sure means of averting the dangers which now threaten the Union from sectionalism. He examined at length the several platforms and the candidates of the three parties, and showed conclusively that the true position of an old line whig in the present contest is with the democratic party. Mr. Jones made a triumphant vindication of Mr. Buchanan from the charge of having done injustice to Mr. Clay in regard to the charge of bargain and corruption. His speech was listened to by the Sena e and a croweded gallery with marked interest, and is destined to exert a powerful influence on the public mind Wash. Union, Saturday.

It is a pleasent duty to record so valuable an accession to the support of Mr. Buchanan as Senator Jones, of Tennessee. Very highly gifted as a popular speaker, he will make his influence felt during the canvass. While he does not surrender any of his whig principles, he has determined to adopt that course which his rare abilities and pure patriotism in order to accomption this difficult feat, she was Just point out, as best calculated to subserve the great whole assembly, the little Count was missed, and the names are found on the list of Mr. Buchanan's suppor-Duchess remained struggling with some unseen ob. ters.
